Genesis 1:1 is taken as a statement regarding the original creation of the totality of the universe. Verse two is then translated “and the earth became formless and void.” The idea is that there was an original creation, perhaps many millennia ago, perhaps even millions of years ago.

Genesis Meaning in Hebrew | Answers in Genesis
In the first poem (Ps 119:1–8) each line begins with an aleph (the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet). In the second poem each line begins with a bet (the second letter) and so on through the whole alephbet. The whole thing together gives a sense of thoroughness, completeness, and determination.

The Hebrew word translated as “formed” is the verb רצי (yatsar) and is best understood as the process of pressing clay together to “form” an object, such as a figurine. We can plainly see from this verse that man was made from something, therefore the Hebrew word bara in Genesis 1:1 cannot mean “to make something out of nothing.”
