A painting on this type of paper ends up with a nice velvety look. Diffused wet-into-wet application can be achieved on cold pressed, but there's a risk of losing the forms from excessive pigment bleeding. The artist working with this paper must be quite skilled at controlling the degree of fugitive paint.

Understanding the Different Grades of Watercolor Paper

This can be difficult for the artist to work with because the paint pools in valleys on the paper. Typically lighter weight sheets are more susceptible to buckling with heavy applications of water. To resolve this issue, watercolor paper can be "soaked and stretched" so it remains completely flat when the artist begins painting.
